I loved; and in the morning sky,
How fairy-like the custic grew!
Cloud-hassied turers pointing high
Forever to the dreamy blun;
Height formation leaping through and through
The golden smalthe, on the air
Gay banness streaming never drew
Painter or poet scene more fair.

And in that castle I would live,
And in that castle I would die;
And there, in curtained bowers would give
Heart-warm responses—sigh for sigh;
Thare whon but one sweet face was nigh,
The orient hours would move along.
And ripple as they glided by,
Like stansas of an antique song.

O foolish heart! O young Romance, That failed with the neon-day sun! Ales, for gentle delliance— For the life-long pleasures never won! O, for a season dead and gone! A wirtard time, which then did seem Only a prelude, leading on To aweeten portions of the dream!

She died: nor were my orange flower She died: nor were my orange flowers;
No imper, in the morning sky.
That fair? castle lifts its towers
Which shokes swhile, so instrously;
Torn are the banorole, and dry
The silver frontains in its hable.
But the drear sea, with endies sigh,
Moans round and o'er the crumbled wells.

Let the winds blow! let the white surge Ever among those ruins wall! Its meaning is a welcome dirge. For wishes that could not swall. Let the winds blow! a fleroer gale is wild within me! what may qual! That sullen remper?! I must sail Whither, O whither, who can tell?

Interesting Pacts Concerning the Human Body.

There are about two hundred bones in the human body, exclusive of the teeth. These bones are composed of animal and earthly materials, the former predominating in youth, and the latter in old age, rendering the bones brittle. The most important of bones is the spine; which is composed of twenty-four small bones called the vertebræ, on the top of the other, curiously hooked together and fastened by elastic ligaments, forming a pillar by which the human body is supported.

ported.

The bones are moved by the musclea, of which there are more than five hundred. The red ment or beef, the fat being excluded, is the muscular fabric of the ox. There are two sets of muscles, one to draw the bones one way, and the other to draw them back again. We cannot better describe the mus-cles than by comparing them to fine, clastic thread, bound up in their cases of skin. Many muscles terminate in tendons, which are stout cords, such as may be seen travers-ing the back of the hand, just without the akin, and which can be observed to move when the hand is open or shut. Every mo-tion we make, even the involuntary one of breathing, is performed through the agency

In adults there are fifteen quarts of blood, In adults there are infeen quarts of blood, each weighing about two pounds. This blood is of two kinds, arterial and venous. The first is the pure blood as it leaves the heart to nourish the frame, and is of a bright vermillion. The last is the blood as it rans to the heart leaded with the impurities of the body, to be there refined, and it is of a purple last. Early application of the heart leaders.

ters the small intestines, where it is mixed up with the bile and pancrete juice, and converted into chyle. These small intestines are twenty-four feet long, closely packed, of course, and surrounded through their whole length with small tubes, which are like sockets, and drawing off the chyle, compty into a large canal named Thoracic Duct, which runs up the back and discharges the contents into the jugular vein, whence it passes to the heart to assist in forming the arterial to the heart to assist in forming the arterial

The lungs are two bags connected with the open air by the windpipe which branches into innumerable small tubes, all over the inside of the lungs, each terminating in a minute air cell. The outer surface of these air cells is full of small capillaries, infinite small veins, a thin membrane only dividing the air from through the body as life-giving and arterial blood.

The skin serves an important purpose in carrying off the impurities of the system. It is traversed with the capillaries of the body. It is also perforated with countless perspiration tubes, the united length of which amounts to twenty-eight miles, and which drain away from three to four pounds of waste matter every twenty-four hours, or five-eights of all the body discharges.

The nerves are another curious feature of the animal economy. They are, however, but little understood. They are a feelers to tell the wants of the body, and also as conductors to will the muscles to act. They branch out from the brain and spine over the frame in infinitely fine fibers of branches, like twigs in trees.

The Deceptions Bells.

In a Latin sermon on widowhood by Jean Raulin, a monk of Cluny of the fifteenth Raulin, a monk of Cluny of the fifteenth century, there is a story which Rabelains has told again in bis own way. Raulin's version is this:

"A widow consulted her parish priest about her entering into a second marriage. She told him she stood in need of a helpmate and protector, and that her journeyman, for whom she had taken a fancy, was industrious and well acquainted with her late husband trade. Very well, said the priest, 'you had better marry him,' and yet, rejoined the widow, 'I am afraid to do it, for who knows that I may find my servant become my master?" 'Well, then,' said the priest, don't have him.' But what shall I do?' said the widow, the business left to me by my poor dear departed husband is more than I can manage by mysolf.' Marry him, then,' said the priest. 'Ah, but suppose he turns out a scamp?' aid the widow, he may get hold of my property, and run through it all.' Don't have him,' said the priest. Thus the distinctly say, 'Do take your man do take your man. Accordingly, she went home and married him forthwith, but it was not long before he thrashed her soundly, and made her feel that, instead of his mistress, she had been man, and the priest about the wind was actually made up to marry the journeyman, he yould advise her best what to do. The bells were rung, and the widow heard them distinctly say, 'Do take your nam do take your man. Accordingly, she went home and married him forthwith, but it was not long before he thrashed her soundly, and made her feel that, instead of his mistress, she had been seed to the priest, curing the hour when she had been condition of the condition of the priest, using the hour when she had been seed to the priest, using the hour when she had been seed to the priest, using the hour when she had been warning words, 'Do not take him.'

FARMING AS A WHOLE DOES PAY .-FARMING AS A WHOLE DOES FAY.—"One swallow does not make a summer," and a single case of success, in tilling the soil, does not prove that farming pays. The average condition of our farming population is, doubtless, the best evidence of the reward of husbandry. At the last cansus, there were in the State of Connecticut about 22,000 farms, generally occupied by their owners, who cultivate on an average about scienty access. cultivate, on an average, about eighty acres each. The value of these farms, with the tools and stock, was estimated at about eighty-two millions of dollars. This is an verage of thirty-seven hundred dollars to average of thirty-seven hundred dollars to overy farmer, invested in his business—to say nothing of the sums in bank stock, western lands, railroads, manufactories, and other en-terprises. The productions of these farms, consisting of hay, grain, roots, slaughtered animals, butter, cheese, home manufactures, etc., was estimated at about eighteen millions otc., was estimated at about eighteen millions of dollars. This would average to every owner of a farm, an income of over eight hundred dollars, exclusive of house rent, and fuel, and interest money. We doubt if any other class in the community, embracing so large a number of individuals, can show as much average wealth. Why should so many of our sons quit the plow for other more hazardous callings, when they have before them the moral certainty of success in cultivating the soil?

Personal Description of Pope by Six Joshua Reynolds once saw Pope. It was about the year 1740, at an auction of books or pictures. He rememberes that there was a lane formed to let him pass freely through the assamblage, and he proceeded along bowing to those who were on each side. He was, according to Sir Joshua's account, about four feet six high, very humpbacked and deformed; he were a black coat, and, according to the fishion of that time, had on a little sword. Sir body, to be there refined, and it is of a purple hue. Every pulsation of the heart sends out two onnees of arterial blood, and as there are from seventy to eighly beats in a minute, a hogshead of blood passes through the heart every hour. In fevers the pulsations are necelerated, and consequently death ensues if the iever is not checked.

The stomach is a boiler if we may use such a figure, which drives the human engine. Two sets of muscles, crossing each other, turn the food over and over, churning it up in the gastric juice till it has been reduced to the consistency of thin paste. The process requires from two to four hours.

Emerging from the stomach the food enters the small intestines, which always are found in the mouths of crooked always are found in the mouths of crooked approving and the muscles which ran across the check were so strongly marked as to appear like small cords.—Matone's Memoir.

ing heavily and steadily during Bank hours. So far as we could learn there was no change in Monetary matters, which were moderately active; the demand being well sustained. The Discount-houses reported the offerings nearly equal to their receipts and ability to accommodate. Currency was still coming in with considerable freedom.

The market for Eastern Exchange was very close yesterday, and some of the large houses seemed unable to meet the demand, which was pressing, at 1/2 prem. The buying rate was often above 40c., ranging up to 45c., and in some instances dealers bought and sold at the same figures.

the membrane only dividing the air from the blood.

The impure portion of venous blood is carbonic acid, which, having a stronger affinity for air than blood, passes through this membrane to a gaseous state, combines with the air in the air cells, and is expelled with the next respiration. Meanwhile the oxygen of the air unites with the blood and becomes purified: then passing into the heart, being mixed with chyle, it is forced through the body as life-giving and arterial blood.
